Supporting Veterans in the Workplace

A misconception is that vets are hard to employ and all of them returning civilian life have PTSD. According to a recent study this is not so. Vets have high work ethics, are very adaptive and bring much creative problem solving to the work environment.

Vets have experience being team players during training, a near default skill that can transform a work environment, according to military.com. Military life makes them adept to high stress and fast pace environment, where other counterparts might fall short, they seem to fill in that gap. So when your looking for a highly skilled creative problem solver, look no further than your own veteran neighbor to take the cake!
